Not illustrated. 1904 Excerpt: . lieth a wreck On the shoals of time, With no one to check The tidals of crime. The child of the street, Who--who will befriend? Her end is complete--Nor wonder the end. WEEP FOR THE FALLEN. Weep, for the fallen--weep, Shed thou the pitying tear, For they who sadly keep, The memory dark and drear. Remember they are gems, But tarnished in renown, A garden s broken stems, By tempests battered down. But God--shall set anew, His eye relight the blaze, And odors yet shall strew, The wastes of other days. Then weep, for the fallen, weep, Who feel the sorrowing tear, And in their souls must keep, That echo s haunting fear. THE PRODIGAL. Poor prodigal of fate art thou, From thee, all eyes are turned, And lips, that once would bless thy brow, Hath now their idol spurned. For thee, no strains of music sound, No feast of love is spread, But shadow easts its gloom around And echoes haunt thy tread. Where is the merry boasted smile, The fondly cherished wreath? Alas! the one was full of guile, The other full of death. But look beyond, this world of tears, A world thou canst but mourn, To where a Saviour calms thy fears, And smiling hail the dawn. THE ANGEL S PRAYER. A Saint stood on the mountain Where lands stretched far and wide, A Saint stood on the mountain And Pity by her side. She looked upon the valley, She looked...
