Excerpt from The Review of Reviews, Vol. 15: November 15, 1899 Radical extremists have a right to their views and the expression of them, though it is no ticeable that they have been completely smoth ered by the outburst of loyal ardour. No more pithy concentration of the opinions of the anti-interventionists could be desired than the Sydney Bulletins picture of a widowed mother, weeping over the tombstone of her son. The inscription runs Killed while shooting at perfect strangers in South Africa. Go thou and do likewise. It isfdexterous. Yetsomething besidethefrnarkg. Most sol diers killed in any quarrel fallifightingszei foe. They know not, and against whomthey; enter tain no direct animosity Enough; for them that he is for the time-being the enemybf the nation or the cause fdr whichthey; rhiistrisk their lives. Passing by: these ebullitions, New South Wales, inclined at one moment to hesitatefc-omes out as the colony which, after all, has shipped most men to the seat of war. Mr. Lyne, as is the way with politicians who wait for the signal of public opinion, was disposed, when he got it, to out strip requirements. He proposed, after the despatchof the individual contingents, to send a supplementary federated force. That idea was. Pressed by Victoria in the first instance. And might have been wisely acted upon. But enough has been done now. The troops sent were acceptable to the Imperial Government, but notessentialfand no more are needed. That intimation has been conveyed to Canada with cordial acknowledgments, and the mes sage would be repeated to these colonies.
