Remembering that what has been stated of congressional, is true also of State legislative bodies, it is to be observed, first, that most of the decisions which expound what the organic or statutory law intends, would be acknowledged in cases of contest over representative offices and perhaps* with special instances added, illustrate vexed questions in other contested elections and secondly, as to the residue, they evince it to be equally operative in the simplicity of its aim, and in determining by its canon, the will of the electoral body; and this, whether the subject of contest is projected on the ground plan of society, or culminates near the highest and most commanding part of its superstructure. In other words, the rules are the same, when the method of enquiry is once duly instituted, whether the office in plaint is that of a supervisor of the poor or State Treasurer, or of a town supervisor or...
