Excerpt from Report on Sundry Petitions Respecting Distinctions of Color Since the spirit of the Revolution broke the chains of slavery in Massachusetts, no inequality of civil rights has here existed. The man of color may exercise the elective franchise, to the fullest extent, in the choice of his rulers. If possessing intelligence and integrity to secure the confidence of his fellow-citizens, no restraint, save that of prejudice, prevents him from seeking the highest honors and holding the most elevated offices of church or state. No written rule excludes him from filling the seat of the chief magistrate, reclining on the cushioned basis of the senator, occupying the bench of the judiciary, or holding any post of civic or municipal distinction. His property is sacred; his house is walled about with the legal ramparts of the castled home his offspring enjoy the common benefits of education with the children of other races. If he be deprived of any of the privileges of free dom, of any excitements of ambition, of any of the enjoy ments of social happiness, it is by a power beyond that of the laws.
