SEX, DRUGS ISLAM AUTOBIOGRAPHY OF AN X FIGHTER PILOT

CreateSpace Independent Publishing Platform. Paperback. Condition: New. This item is printed on demand. 230 pages. Dimensions: 9.0in. x 6.0in. x 0.5in. Sex, Drugs and Islam is a gripping account of the life of a Pakistani immigrant who has in every sense of the word lived the American dream. This thrilling book follows an intellectually spiritual journey with precious lessons learned. Daris motivation to write this book, derives simply from his compelling desire to share with people, how not to miss out on life. This book is a great instruction manual on how to live or not to live an exciting life by constantly challenging the status quo. While the results may not always be what you expected, in the end, experiencing the journey itself is what matters. Most Readers will find this book an easy read, non-stop action, sometimes graphic, but with no holds barred description on what really happened. While there are many interesting events described, there are three principle themes that stand out. These are: hardened, misguided religious or other, beliefs, can rob one of true joys of life; extraordinary life can be experienced by challenging these beliefs constantly and the courage to make choices, you otherwise will not; resulting in lots of joy and smiles, and zero apologies for living a wonderful life till the end. Laced with cynicism, profanities and humor, this hardcore narrative starts with his childhood days in Pakistan, where he quits his low life in gangs and dares to join an elite group of fighter pilots in the Pakistan Air Force. And this is when he discovers America and the limitless potential it offers. This true account of an exciting life well-lived is a great instruction manual on how to live joyfully. The author invites the reader to challenge normalcy and experience the joys and...
